A Message from the Lords.

A Message from the Lords, by Mr. Adam and Mr. Novice.

Mr. Speaker,
The Lords have agreed to the several Bills following, without Amendment; viz.: A Bill, intituled, An Act for converting the Rich- mond Penitentiary (Ireland) Bill, to Freehold tenure; and by leaving out "of the Tithes," and after "commuted," 1. ult. Clause (A.), as far as Pr. 32. 1. 9.

The Commons agree to the Amendments as far as P. 32. l. 10.

The Commons propose to amend the Amendment Pr. 32. l. 10. by leaving out "real value of," and inserting "sum fairly payable by way of composition for;"

The Commons agree to the Amendments as far as Pr. 33. l. 9.

The Commons disagree to the insertion proposed by the Lords, Pr. 33. l. 9, and in lieu thereof propose to insert "such an," and after "thereof," Pr. 33. l. 10, to add "as shall be an equivalent for all such," and "paid or daily proposed."

The Commons agree to the Amendment Pr. 33. l. 13.

The Commons disagree to the Amendment, 33. l. 28, for the following Reasons: Because one of the objects of this Clause is to enable the Commissioners to reduce the sum at which the permanent rent-charge is to be calculated in those cases in which the real value of the Tithes during seven years preceding Christmas One thousand eight hundred and thirty-five, may have been greater than would probably accrue permanently in the parish, according to the usual course of husbandry: Because this object might be defeated, if the words proposed to be inserted by the Lords should be construed with reference to the past value of the Tithes only, and not with reference to their permanent average value.

The Commons agree to the Amendments as far as the Amendment, l. ult. in Clause (A.), added by way of rider to the Bill.

The Commons disagree to so much of the Amendment, l. ult. Clause (A.), as proposes to leave out "Commissioners," to "and," Pr. 39. l. 24, for the following Reason: Because they observe that the Lords have made this Amendment for the purpose of removing the Clause here struck out to a subsequent part of the Bill; and because it appears to the Commons that the place in which the Clause stood originally is the most suitable for it, as another Clause almost immediately preceding relates to the mode of valuing the Tithes, hopes and day produce, to which this Clause has also reference.

The Commons propose to amend Clause (F.), by leaving out "during that period," Fo. l. 1. 9.

The Commons agree to the Amendments as far as Pr. 52. l. ult.

The Commons disagree to Clause (G.), for the Reasons already stated for disagreeing to the Amendment to leave out from "Commissioners," l. ult. in Clause (A.), to "and," Pr. 29. l. 24.

The Commons agree to the Amendments as far as Pr. 81. l. 38.

The Commons disagree to the Amendment Pr. 81. l. 38, for the following Reasons: Because the continuance of the Tithes which would be preserved from commutation by this Amendment would be productive of dissensions between the Tithe-owners and the Tithe-payers, which it is a principal object of this Bill to put an end to. Because if it should be found that any inconveniences should be occasioned by converting these Tithes into a Rent-charge, in the manner provided by the Bill, provision might be made in a Bill now before your Lordships, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Personal Tithes," for extending the inquiries authorized to be made by that Bill to the Rent-Rent-charges for which these Tithes will have been commuted, with a view to extinguishing them upon a due compensation. The Commons agree to the other Amendments made by the Lords to the Bill. The said Reasons, being read a second time, were agreed to.

Ordered, That a Conference be desired with the Lords upon the subject-matter of the Amendments made by their Lordships to the said Bill: And that Lord John Russell do go to the Lords, and desire the said Conference.

A Motion was made, and the Question being proposed, That the Order of the day, for the third reading of the ingrossed Bill to amend the Laws relating to Customs, be now read;

An Amendment was proposed to be made to the Question, by leaving out from the word “That” to the end of the Question, in order to add the words “an humble Address be presented to His Majesty, that His Majesty will be graciously pleased to direct that an immediate Survey be made of the Harbours of Liverpool, Holyhead and Port Dinlolog, and of such other points on the Western Coast of England and Wales as may appear suitable for a direct communication between London and Dublin, so as to ascertain the respective qualifications and capacities of improvement of each as a Packet Harbour between London and Dublin, and also as a Harbour of Refuge for the trade passing up and down the Irish Channel, with a view to such Surveys being said before Parliament,” instead thereof.

And the Question being proposed, That the words proposed to be left out stand part of the Question—

Tithes Commutation Bill.

Lord John Russell reported, That having been with the Lords to desire a Conference on the subject-matter of the Amendments made by their Lordships to the Bill, intituled, An Act for the Commutation of Tithes in England and Wales, the Lords do agree to a Conference; and appoint the same, immediately, in the Committee Room No. 5.

The Lords agree to a Free Conference, as desired by their House in their Message of yesterday, and to appoint the same, presently, in the Committee Room, No. 3.—And then the Messengers withdrew.

Ordered, that Lord John Russell, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Lord Viscount Palmerton, Lord Viscount Howick, Lord Viscount Morpeth, Sir John Hobhouse, Mr. Ponsonby, Lord Seymor, Mr. Attorney General, Mr. Solicitor General, Mr. Berneaud, Mr. Leveson, Mr. Attenborough, Mr. Taylor, Sir John Leslie, and Mr. Baines, be appointed Managers to manage the Free Conference.

Then the names of the Managers were called over; and they went to the Conference:—And being returned.

Lord John Russell reported, That the Managers had met the Lords at the free Conference, which was managed on the part of the Lords by the Earl of Grey; that they acquainted the Lords that the Commons agree to the Amendment in Pr. 4. 1. 28.; that they insist upon their disagreement to the Amendments in Pr. 5. 1. 25. and in Pr. 6. 1. 17. and upon their disagreement to Clause (L.); and that they agree to the Amendment made by the Lords in the Amendment made by the Commons to Clause (Z).

That the Commons great regret that they are unable to agree to all the Amendments made by the Lords; that they insist on their disagreement to the Amendments made by the Lords in Pr. 5. 1. 25. and in Pr. 6. 1. 17. because it does not seem reasonable, when the means of popular Election are at hand, to refer to chance the nomination not only of the Mayor, but likewise as a necessary consequence of the body of Aldermen, who will remain in office for the periods of Three and Six years.

That the Commons insist on their disagreement to Clause (L.); that they consider this Amendment of far greater importance than the former; that they fear that, by giving any assent to it, they might countenance the belief that they were prepared to continue in the members of the late Corporations a trust which, in too many instances, has been misused; that they conclude that the convenience of leaving the direction of those charitable trusts to the Lord Chancellor might be obviated, in the opinion of the Commons, by expressly giving to the Lord Chancellor the nomination of new trustees, to be appointed under the Great Seal, for a single year; that the Commons are unwilling to believe that the Lords attach so much importance to this Clause as to consider its insertion in this Bill absolutely essential; that the Commons think it possible that the Lords will agree to the Amendments to which the House of Commons have disagreed.
That thereupon the Earl of Ripon acquainted the Managers that, as one of those who had been deputed by the House of Lords to meet the House of Commons in Conference upon the present occasion, he begged on their part to assure the Managers on the part of the Commons, that they felt it to be their duty, and should discharge that duty most conscientiously, by the wishes of the House of Lords, by giving most respectful attention to the suggestions and representations which had been made to them on the part of the House of Commons, feeling most anxious, whatever difference of opinion may exist upon an occasion in which the two Houses of Parliament may be called upon to meet together in free Conference, to do all in their power to promote the public interests and sound legislation, by maintaining that harmony, good understanding and mutual respect which has always characterized the intercourse of the two Houses of Parliament. That, with these feelings, it would be their duty to represent to the House of Lords the statement which had been made to them, in order that they may receive from that House their final instructions as to the decision to which they will come.

That thereupon the Managers delivered the Bill and Amendments to their Lordships.

A Message from the Lords, by Mr. Roswell and Message from the Lords.

Mr. Speaker,

The Lords have passed a Bill, intituled, An Act for further facilitating the hearing and determining Suits of Suits in Equity in His Majesty's Court of Exchequer at Westminster; to which the Lords desire the concurrence of this House: And also,

The Lords have commanded us to acquaint this Municipal House, That the Lords do desire a Free Conference on the subject of the last Free Conference, and Bill.

And the Messengers were again called in; and Mr. Speaker acquainted them therewith:—And then they again withdrew.

Ordered, That the Managers who managed the last Free Conference do manage this.

And the names of the Managers were called over; and some of them not appearing, Mr. Hume, Mr. Escoft, Mr. Warburton, Mr. Cutler Ferguson, and Mr. Loch, were added in lieu of those who did not appear.

Then the Managers went to the Conference; and being returned:

Lord John Russell reported, That the Managers who had met the Lords at the free Conference, which was managed on the part of the Lords by the Earl of Ripon, who acquainted them, that the Lords adhere to their Amendment in Pr. 3. 25:

Because the Municipal Corporations Act not having provided that a fresh election should take place in the event of an equality of votes, the Lords consider that it would be in accordance with the principle of that Act, which this Bill is intended to amend, to meet the difficulty arising from an equality of votes, in the manner in which it is met under the provisions of that Act, namely, by the casting vote of the person presiding at the election.

That the Lords likewise adhere to the insertion of Clause (L.).

Because they are of opinion, that the inconvenience arising from the placing of the Charitable Trusts under the management of the Lord Chancellor, would be much greater than that of allowing them to remain until the end of the next Session, or until Parliament shall otherwise provide, in the hands of the persons in whom both Houses of Parliament concur in continuing them by the Act of last year.

That
The House observed, that it has not appeared that any practical injury has arisen from the disposition with respect to these Trusts made with the concurrence of both Houses in the course of the last Session; but the Lords are nevertheless unanimously desirous that the management of these Charitable Funds should be placed upon a permanent and satisfactory footing, whereby the administration of Charities intended for the benefit of the poor, might, as far as possible, be divested of all party influence.

That thereupon a discussion arose between the Managers on the part of the Commons, and the Managers on the part of the Lords; and that the Managers on the part of the Lords thereupon delivered the Bill, and Amendments, to the Managers of the Commons.

Ordered, That the said Reasons and Amendments be taken into further consideration upon this day three months.

Then the House resumed the consideration of the Amendments made by the Lords to the Established Church Bill.

1. Resolved, That it appears to this Committee, that the navigation of the River Thames, in the Port of London, has for a great length of time been subject to serious and increasing obstructions, by which the maritime approach to the Metropolis has been impeded, the shipping exposed to injury and needless detention, and that frequent accidents have occurred, several of which were attended with the loss of human life.

2. Resolved, That these obstructions have been produced by the crowded state of the River, arising from the greatly increased and still increasing traffic in Shipping and navigation, by the introduction of Steam Navigation, and especially by the Colliers stationed in the Pool, and the ill-regulated manner in which Colliers have been permitted to lie at anchor in the stream, by Shoals and Banks, which present impediments to the Navigation; and, finally, by the want of an efficient supervision and a more effective execution of the Harbour Service; and that although it appears to this Committee that since the period at which they commenced their inquiries an improvement in the last respect has taken place, yet they conceive that the public have no adequate security against its recurrence.

3. Resolved, That this Committee are of opinion, that the various conflicting jurisdictions and claims of the Admiralty, the Trinity House and the Corporation of the city of London, over the River Thames below the Bridges, have had a most injurious effect upon the interests of Navigation, and that it is desirable that they should be consolidated and vested in some one responsible body, and that means should be found to provide for the removal of Shoals and obstructions in the bed of the River.

4. Resolved, That, considering the magnitude of the interests involved, and the pressing necessity of remedial regulations under legislative authority, by which accidents on the River may be provided against, additional security to property all afforded, and of Shoals and obstructions in the bed of the River.

5. Resolved, That the Commons agree to all the other Amendments made by the Lords to the Bill.

Ordered, That the Select Committee appointed Shipwrecks. to inquire into the Causes of the increased number of Shipwrecks, with a view to ascertain whether such improvements might not be made in the construc- tion, equipment and navigation of Merchant Vessels, as would greatly diminish the annual loss of Life and Property at Sea, have Power to report their observations and opinion thereupon to the House, together with the Minutes of the Evidence taken before them.

Mr. Buckingham reported from the said Select Committee; and to whom the Petition of Joseph Downes was referred; That they had considered the matters referred to them; and had come to several Resolutions, which they had directed him to report, together with the Minutes of the Evidence taken before them:—And the Resolutions of the Committee were read, as follow:—

I.—EXTENT OF LOSS IN PROPERTY AND LIVES AT SEA.

1. Resolved, That the number of Ships and Vessels belonging to the United Kingdom, which were wrecked or lost in the periods specified below, appears, by a Return made to the Committee from the books at Lloyd's, to be as follows:

Number of Vessels stranded or wrecked.

Making a total of 1,203 ships or vessels wrecked and missing in the first period of three years, and a total of 1,792 wrecked and missing in the second period of three years.

That the number of ships wrecked and lost in the two periods named above, at the assumed value of £5,000 for each ship and cargo, on the average of the whole; the loss of property occasioned by these wrecks would amount, in the first three years, to £6,015,000, being an average of £2,005,000 per annum; and in the last three years to £8,510,000, being an average of £2,836,666 per annum.

That the number of ships in each of the years above specified, of which the entire crews were drowned, though the number of each crew is not stated, appears, by the same Return made to Your Committee, from the books of Lloyd's, to have been as follows:

Number of Vessels in each year, of which the entire crews were drowned.

Making a total of 49 in the first period of three years, and a total of 81 in the second period of three years.

That the number of persons drowned in each of the years specified, in addition to the above, and of which the number drowned belonging to each vessel is distinctly known, appears, by the same Return from Lloyd's books, to have been as follows:

Number of Persons drowned in each year by Ships.

That assuming the average number of persons in each of the vessels of which the entire crews were lost, to consist of 16 individuals, including officers, seamen and passengers, it would appear, that in the first three years the number of persons drowned was 888 in the 49 vessels whose crews were entirely lost, and 1,700 in the vessels of which the exact number of each was known, making a total of 2,282 lives, or 763 per annum; and that in the last three years the number of persons drowned was 972 in the 81 vessels whose crews were entirely lost, and 1,210 in the vessels of which the exact number in each was known, making a total of 2,682 lives, or 894 per annum.

That among the special cases of loss by Shipwreck on particular parts of the coast, it has been stated, that during the last four years 272 ships were lost belonging to the Port of Tyne, averaging six vessels per annum; but the number of vessels registered in that port being about 1,000 sail; that these 272 vessels measured 69,489 tons; and assuming these to have been total losses, and the average value of the whole to be £10 per ton, the loss of property from this single port would be £6,049,000 in four years, or £1,513,222 per annum, while the number of lives lost in these 272 vessels during the same period was 692; the number of widows and orphans left for relief 147; and the amount of money paid out of the funds of the Seaman's Association at Shields, for relief of members of that society only, amounted to £1,883. 15. 9.; the ships employed from this port being principally colliers, which perform eight or nine voyages in each year, and are continued in occupation during winter as well as summer along a dangerous coast.

That during a period of 16 months, from January 1, 1833, to May 1, 1834, the number of vessels reported in Lloyd's books as missing or lost, and which have never since been heard of, amounted to 95 in number; and these ships being principally engaged in foreign voyages, the calculation made on their value, and the number of their crews, including officers, seamen and passengers, assuming £8,000 as the lowest average value of ship and cargo throughout, and 15 persons as the average number of persons on board the whole, gives a total loss in these missing ships only, for the short period of 16 months, of £769,000 sterling in property, and 1,425 lives.

That these results do not embrace the whole extent of loss in property or lives occasioned by Shipwrecks even among those vessels only which belong to the United Kingdom; inasmuch as these Returns include only the losses entered in Lloyd's books, from which the Returns advertised to be made out; whereas it is well known that many vessels and lives are lost by wreck or foundering at sea, of which no entry is made in Lloyd's books, and of which, as no record is kept, no Return can be produced.

That the whole loss of property in British shipwrecked or foundered at sea, may therefore be assumed as amounting to nearly Three millions sterling per annum; the value of which property, though covered by insurance to certain parties, is not the less absolutely lost to the nation, and its cost paid for by the British public, on whom its loss must ultimately fall.

That the annual loss of life, occasioned by the wreck or foundering of British vessels at sea, may, on the same grounds, be fairly estimated at not less than One thousand persons in each year, which loss is also attended with increased pecuniary burthens to the British public, on whom the support of many of the widows and orphans left destitute by such losses must ultimately fall.

II.—PRINCIPAL CAUSES OF SHIPWRECK.

2. Resolved, That among the various causes of Shipwreck, which appear susceptible of removal or diminution, the following appear to be the most frequent and the most generally admitted:—

Defective construction of Ships.

Imbecility of crews.

Improper or excessive loading.

Inappropriateness of form.

Drunkenness.

5. 2. 1811.

Construction of Ships.

That the defective construction of ships appears to have been greatly encouraged by the system of classification, which from the year 1798 up to the year 1834 was followed at Lloyd's, by which the age of a vessel and the port at which she was built were made the chief tests of her strength and safety; and by which all new vessels, however slightly constructed, were entitled to be registered in the First Class for a given number of years, varying from six to twelve, after which, the strongest ships were placed on a level with the weakest, being excluded from the First Class when the prescribed period of years had expired; the tendency of this system of classification being to induce shipowners to build their ships in the cheapest manner, and with the least degree of strength that was sufficient to sustain their vessels through the shortest period of time after having been on the stocks and others having gone to pieces on their first voyage,) after which period their value would be greatly reduced by their exclusion from the First Class.

Equipment, Repair and Loading.

That the frequent replacing of such vessels as had thus passed into the Second Class, by building new ones to occupy their stations in the First Class, led to an increased supply in the number of new ships beyond the healthy or profitable demand for them; while the vessels which had run out the short term prescribed for their continuance in the First Class, being sold at very reduced prices, and the purchasers having no inducement to put them in an efficient state of repair—since no amount of reparation would restore them to their original position—such vessels were navigated on a less capital and at less freight than others, and by thus competing on lower terms with the already super-abundant number of ships afloat, contributed to produce such general depression of freights and profits, as to compel the most rigid economy in the outfit and expenses of shipping generally, and the greatest efforts to make a moderate interest on the capital employed, which too frequently led to the inadequacy of equipment, the imperfect state of repair, and the improper and excessive loading enumerated among the causes of shipwreck.

Foreign Competition.

That in addition to this operation of severe competition among different classes of shipping belonging to the United Kingdom, the British shipowner had also to meet the competition of foreigners, in the ships of Continental Europe, who, from the many advantages enjoyed by them in the superior cheapness of their materials for building, equipping, and provisioning their vessels, and the lower rate of wages paid to their crews, were enabled to realize profits by superior to which would not even cover the expenses of British ships.

Forms of Ships.

That the inappropriateness of form in British merchant vessels, which often incapacitates them from beating off a lee shore, and consequently leads to their being wrecked, has been partly the result of the nature of British maritime trade, and partly of the defective systems of measurement, and the heavy tonnage duties formerly levied on British ships; many vessels being necessarily constructed of a flat form of bottom to adapt them to the shallow harbours of England, and enable them to lie in safety while aground; but though these last are causes which no system of fiscal regulations could remove, yet it is established and admitted that the system of admeasurement and heavy tonnage duties which formerly existed, presented a strong inducement to shipowners to build their ships of such forms and dimensions as should unite a small nominal tonnage by admeasurement with a large actual capacity for carrying a cargo considerably above the tonnage at which she might be registered; which united qualities could only be obtained at the sacrifice of speed, buoyancy, celebrity of evolution, and consequent incompetency to escape from the dangers of a lee shore.

Classification of Ships.

That the system of classification has been very greatly improved by the formation of a new association, intituled, "Lloyd's Register Society for British and Foreign Shipping," the basis of whose regulations appears to be a bona fide attempt to classify vessels according to their real and intrinsic merits, including their age, construction, materials, workmanship and stores; but though there is good reason to believe that the ultimate result of this new system of classification will be to effect a great improvement in the general character of the shipping of the United States, yet the society possesses no authority, beyond that of any other private association, to enforce the observance of such rules as may be necessary to secure the greatest degree of strength and safety desirable to be attained in merchant ships.

Admeasurement of Tonnage.

That though the system of admeasurement, as recently changed, may define with sufficient accuracy the cubic space of the ship's hold, it is a problem well worthy of attention to discover some method that shall fix the admeasurement of tonnage at the actual amount of dead weight which a ship can carry without sinking, a fixed proportion of which might be deemed the registered tonnage; in order to remove every inducement to build ships of inappropriate forms, with a view to lessen their tonnage duty.

Incompetency of Masters and Officers.

That the frequent incompetency of masters and officers appears to be admitted on all hands, this incompetency sometimes arising from the want of skill and knowledge in seamanship, but more frequently from the want of an adequate knowledge of navigation; it being proved that some masters of merchant vessels have been appointed to command after having been for a very short time at sea; that others have hardly known how to trace a ship's course on the chart, or how to ascertain the latitude by a meridian altitude of the sun; that many are unacquainted with the use of the chronometer, and that very few indeed are competent to ascertain the longitude by lunar observations; while some are appointed to command merchant vessels at periods of such extreme youth, (one instance is given of a boy of 14, all of whose apprentices were older than himself,) and others so wholly destitute of maritime experience, (another instance being given of a porter from a shipowner's warehouse who was made a captain of one of his ships,) that vessels have been met with at sea who were out of their reckoning by several hundreds of miles, and others have been wrecked on coasts from which they believed themselves to have been hundreds of miles distant at the time.

Drunkenness and use of Spirits.

That drunkenness, either in the masters, officers, or men, is a frequent cause of ships being wrecked, leading often to improper and contradictory orders and directions on the part of the officers; sleeping on the look-out, or in the helm among the men; occasioning ships to run foul of each other at night, and one or both founding; to vessels being taken aback or overpowered by sudden squalls, and sinking, upsetting, or getting dismasted, for want of timely vigilance in preparing for the danger; and to the steering wrong courses, so as to run upon dangers which might have otherwise been avoided.

That the practice of taking large quantities of ardent spirits as part of the stores of ships, whether in the Navy or in the Merchant Service, and the habitual use of such spirits, even when diluted with water, and in what is ordinarily considered the moderate quantity used to each man at sea, is itself a very frequent cause of the loss of ships and crews; ships frequently taking fire from the drawing off of spirits, which are always kept under itself a very frequent cause of the loss of ships and crews, and becoming intoxicated; and almost all the cases of insubordination, insolence, disobedience of orders, and refusal to do duty, as well as the confinements and punishments enforced as correctives, both of which must for the time greatly lessen the efficiency of the crews, being clearly traceable to the intoxicating influence of the spirits used by the officers and men.

Experiments in American Vessels.

That the happiest effects have resulted from the experiments tried in the American Navy and Merchant Service without the use of spirits as an habitual article of daily use; there being at present more than 1,000 sail of American vessels traversing all the seas of the world, in every climate, without the use of spirits by their officers or crews, and being, in consequence of this change, in so much greater a state of efficiency and safety than other vessels not adopting this regulation, that the Public Insurance Companies in America make a return of five per cent. of the premium of insurance on vessels completing their voyages without the use of spirits; while the examples of British ships sailing from Liverpool on the same plan have been productive of the greatest benefit to the shipowners, underwriters, merchants, officers and crews.

Marine Insurance.

That the system of Marine Insurance, though affording the means of protecting individuals from excessive loss, has nevertheless a tendency, by transferring the pecuniary responsibility for such losses, from the owners of ships to the underwriters who insure them, to induce less care in the construction of ships, less efficiency in their equipment, and less security for their adequate management at sea; inasmuch as the risk of such loss to the shipowners, can be covered by a fixed premium of insurance, which, being charged on the freight, and then re-charged on the goods conveyed, fixes the real responsibility and real loss ultimately on the public; as all the parties actually engaged in the transaction can secure themselves from any participation in such loss by the aid of Marine Insurance.

Harbours of Refuge.

That there are many portions of the coast of Great Britain in which the want of Harbours of Refuge has led to the loss of many vessels that might have been saved had such harbours existed; of which the two following instances may be named:—In three different gales of wind which occurred in the years 1821, 1824 and 1829, there were lost on the east coast of England, between the Humber and the Dee, 169 vessels, of which 73 were wrecked on the rocks of Redcar, where peculiar facilities exist for constructing a Harbour of Refuge, by which the loss of nearly all these vessels might have been avoided. In the present year, 1836, no less than 39 vessels were seen on shore in Holyhead Bay at one time, 20 of which were totally lost with all their crews on board; and within the same period many vessels have been wrecked between Holyhead and Liverpool, where an excellent position exists for forming a Harbour of Refuge between the Great and Little Orme's Head, near the entrance of the River Dee, at which, had such a harbour been formed, the greater number of these vessels might have been saved.

Imperfection of Charts.

That the imperfection of charts is more particularly the cause of shipwreck in the newly opened regions of the Eastern Archipelago and the China seas, where, notwithstanding the highly valuable labours of the East India Company's maritime officers, and the zealous perseverance and ability of their distinguished hydrographer, the late Capt. Horsburgh, whose directory and charts of the Eastern seas have been invaluable safeguards to life and property in those regions, there yet remains much to be achieved towards obtaining correct nautical surveys of the islands and coasts.

III.—Remedies proposed or suggested.

Mercantile Marine Board.

3. Resolved, That it is a matter of the first importance to authorize, by enactment, the formation in London of a Mercantile Marine Board, to direct, superintend and regulate the affairs of the Mercantile Marine of the United Kingdom, on such a plan of organization and control as shall unite a due regard to the private interests of the shipowners, merchants and underwriters, whose individual property may be embarrassed thereby, with an equal attention to the public interests in the preservation of the national capital from destruction at sea; and, above all, in securing as far as possible the safety of the lives of those who may be engaged in navigating the ships and conducting the maritime commerce of the country.

That this Mercantile Marine Board should be so constituted as to embrace a competent number of experienced officers of the Royal Navy, and masters in the Merchant Service, united with experienced shipowners and shipbuilders, assisted by a skilful hydrographer, a professor of nautical astronomy and navigation, and one or more men of eminence in the legal profession, the election of such members to be vested, in certain proportions, in the Admiralty, the Trinity Board, and the Shipowners, and to be irremovable from office, except by the concurrence of the three bodies named; and that to such a Board should be entrusted the power to carry into effect, both in London and the outports, under the sanction and authority of Parliament, the following primary objects:

Code of Maritime Law.

The compilation and consolidation of a Code of Maritime Law, embracing so much of the existing common and statute law of the realm as should appear to the Board to be most important to be adopted and made generally known; adding thereto such other provisions as might seem necessary to the completion of such a Code as should clearly and accurately define the relative duties and obligations of shipowners, officers and seamen; with a view to supply the remarkable defect under which Great Britain now labours, in being almost the only maritime country of the world in which no such special code of maritime law exists.

Nautical Improvement.

The promotion and encouragement of Nautical Improvement, by receiving, examining and reporting upon plans presented to them for that purpose, whether in science, art or discipline, embracing therefore subjects connected with nautical astronomy and navigation, hydrography and surveying, naval architecture, seamanship, rigging, stowage, sailing, regulating of crews, and other matters conducing to the improvement of British ships and British seamen.
Classification of Ships.
The perfecting a system of Classification of Ships, to the utmost attainable point of accurately defining, by such classification, the real state and condition of every ship registered.

Building, Surveying and Equipment.

The collection of information as to the best methods for building, surveying, fitting out, equipping, loading and furnishing with the requisite supply of men, provisions, water and boats, all ships built and registered in the United Kingdom; and the suggestion of the best means of giving practical efficiency to the information thus acquired.

Examination of Officers.
The formation of certain standards of qualification in seamanship and navigation, to be attained by officers before they should receive licenses of appointment to particular grades in the Merchant Service; and certain higher standards of qualification in seamanship, navigation and nautical astronomy, to be attained by masters before they should be entitled to receive licenses of appointment to the command of vessels of different classes and for different voyages.

The appointment of examiners in seamanship, navigation, and nautical astronomy, for the public examination of all candidates for the appointment as officers or commanders, with power to remand all who should be deficient in the requisite degree of knowledge for the class to which the candidate might aspire, and with a power also to grant licenses of superior skill and knowledge, authorizing each class to wear a uniform, as was done in the late mercantile marine of the East India Company, differing from the uniform of the Navy, but at the same time sufficiently marked for the purpose of distinguishing the persons wearing it as passed officers of the Merchant Service.

Savings Banks and Asylums.

The preservation of the health, strength and moral character of seamen, which are material elements in the efficiency of ships' crews, and tend to lessen the risk of Shipwrecks, by the establishment of Savings Banks for the wages of seamen, and Asylums for the reception of the men and their effects, either in ships to be moored afloat, adapted to their reception, or in buildings erected on shore; for the purpose of saving these seamen, as far as may be found practicable, from the misery and degradation into which they are so constantly plunged almost immediately after their return from sea, when, being made intoxicated, and sometimes stipulated by drugs, they are robbed and plundered by crimps who make them their victims, and who hold them in actual bondage till their wages are drained from them, when they are often taken in a state of intoxication to a ship, of the officers and crew of which they know nothing; and their advance of wages, instead of being applied to the purchase of an outfit for the voyage, is seized by their original betrayer for a real or pretended debt incurred while in his custody.

Registry Office.
The formation of Registry Offices for merchant seamen, at which the characteristics of name, age, capacity and character of every seaman (which, by the late Act for the Registration of British Seamen, must be granted to all seamen demanding the same from their commanders at the time of their discharge,) may be deposited and recorded in a register book to be kept for that purpose; such Registry Offices to be bound to furnish, free of expense, authenticated copies of such certificates of character and seaman applying for the same; in order to afford the requisite facility for the selection of the best men; and to furnish inducements to commanders to engage at early periods of the vessel's fitting out, the actual crews by which their ships are to be manned for the voyage.

Nautical Schools.
The establishment of cheap Nautical Schools, either in ships afloat adapted to the purpose, or in suitable buildings on shore, in which the practical duties of seamanship and the elements of navigation should be taught to the young apprentices who are training up for the sea; and in which, under proper direction, those officers and commanders should be paid to their habits of cleanliness, order and sobriety, and the preservation of their moral characters, all of which are at present unhappily neglected.

Courts of Inquiry.
The arrangement of a plan for the institution of Courts of Inquiry to examine into the circumstances of every Shipwreck that occurs, as far as may be practicable, with power to pronounce a verdict of censure on the owners or commanders of all those vessels where the result of the inquiry should establish the fact of such wreck being occasioned by any fault or deficiency on the part of either, as well as to remit or redoundably the owner and commanders of those ships against whom no fault could be proved, and to make the evidence and verdict in each case public in every port of the Kingdom; with further power to suspend, for a given time, the licenses or certificates of such officers and seamen as should be proved guilty of gross incompetency or gross neglect of duty; and to reward, either by re-imbursement of their loss of wages and effects, or by gratuities, or medals of honour and distinction, those officers and commanders should have particularly distinguished themselves by their skill, courage or humanity in preserving the lives and property of others, whether actually belonging to the ships that were wrecked, or coming to their assistance from other vessels or from the shore.

Settlement of Disputes.
The formation of Special Tribunals for the cheap, speedy and open trial and adjudication of all questions arising between shipowners, officers and men, relating to claims for wages, breaches of discipline, and such other matters of dispute as might be fitly submitted to summary jurisdiction; in order to avoid the great delay, expense and uncertainty attending such trials in the ordinary courts of law and police, as at present constituted, the effect of which is often sufficient to deter parties from seeking redress, and thus to defeat the ends of justice, equally to shippers, officers and seamen.

Funds from Fees.

That the funds for the support of the Mercantile Marine Board in London, and its auxiliary establishments at the principal out-ports, might be raised by the payment of moderate fees on the registration of ships, and on the granting of licenses and certificates to officers and commanders, aided by such contributions from the public revenue as the institution might require.

Assistance of Government.

That while the Marine Board should be engaged in carrying out the principles and accomplishing the objects last enumerated, there appear to this Committee to be others well worthy the attention of the Government, by the promotion of which they can render material assistance towards the improvement of British ships, and the relief of British seamen, more especially the following:

Reduction of Duties.
The gradual reduction of all the duties, imposts and taxes which press in the first instance on shipping, and which tend to enhance the cost of their building, equipment and navigation; so as to enable...
enable them the better to meet the severe competition of which they are now subject with the ships of other nations.

Diminished Use of Spirituous Liquors.

The encouragement, in His Majesty's Navy, of the system, so happily followed both in the ships of war and merchant vessels of America, and in some instances in the merchant ships of England with the best results in every case, of discontinuing the daily supply of spirits to the seamen as an article of necessary use, and substituting the more nutritious and wholesome beverages of coffee, cocoa, chocolate or tea; so as to restrict the quantity of spirits supplied as stores to the amount required for special and urgent occasions, to be served under the direction of the commander and medical officer of each ship, and at such periods only as they might demn necessary.

Loading and Provisions.

The prevention, by such means as may be deemed most efficient, of the practice of carrying any portion of the ship's cargoes on deck, by which vessels are frequently upset and water-logged or sunk; and the same measure of an absolute portion of the provisions and water for the crew, to be kept in some part of the vessel that shall be accessible in such cases of peril, to prevent the dreadful scenes of hunger, misery and lingering death to which so man can be subjected every year, for the want of some such securities as those proposed.

International Negotiations.

The opening and negotiation with all the maritime powers of the world with which Great Britain has either political or commercial relations, in order to effect, if possible, a comprehensive treaty with each and all of them, to use their best endeavours for the preservation of the lives and property of those who may have the misfortune to be wrecked on their shores, first securing the lives, and affording sustenance, shelter and protection to the persons of those who may be cast upon their coasts, and then disposing to the greatest advantage of the property saved, holding the proceeds for a given period at the command of the lawful claimants, if any should appear; and after such period, should no claimants apply for the same, to dispose of the amount to a Shipwreck Fund, out of which to defray the expenses incurred in the preservation of life and property saved on their coasts; in order to supersede, if possible, the previous barbarous practice of plundering the ships and men thrown by misfortune on dangerous shores, as well as to transfer the proceeds of such wrecks from the funds of the British Admiralty and lords of the manor to a fund for the relief of shipwrecked mariners, and the restitution to its lawful owners of shipwrecked property.

Plans and Models.

That among the various plans and models of improved improvements in the construction of vessels, which have been submitted to the Committee, there appear to be none more worthy of serious attention than those which show the great superiority, in strength and powers of resistance, of the solid bottoms for ships, as evidenced in the case of His Majesty's ship Pique, over the ordinary method of construction in merchant vessels, by which open spaces are left between every pair of timbers.
They conceive, also, that the apparatus of Captain Moody, for conveying a rope communication from shore to the ship, in cases of wreck, and the apparatus of Mr. Trengrouse, for conveying a rope communication from the ship to the shore, or from one ship to another, are deserving of national encouragement, as calculated to rescue many lives from destruction, wherever speedily and judiciously applied.

Vol. 91.

American Shipping.

That the Committee cannot conclude its labours without calling attention to the fact, that the ships of the United States of America, frequenting the ports of England, are stated by several witnesses to be superior to those of a similar class amongst the ships of Great Britain, the commanders and officers being generally considered as skilful as seamen and navigators, and more universally persons of education than the commanders and officers of British ships of a similar size and class trading from England to America; while the seamen of the United States are considered to be more carefully selected, and to be more efficient; that American ships sailing from Liverpool to New York have a preference over English vessels sailing to the same port, both as to freight and to time of insurance; and, higher wages being given, their whole equipment is maintained in a higher state of perfection, so that fewer losses occur; and as the American shipping have increased of late years in the proportion of 12 ½ per cent. per annum, while the British shipping have increased within the same period only 1½ per cent. per annum, the constantly increasing demand for seamen by the increasing maritime commerce of the whole world, the numbers off by shipwreck, and the successions offered by the superior wages of American vessels, cause a large number of British seamen every year to leave the service of their own country, and to embark in that of the United States of America, and these comprising chiefly the most skilful and competent of our mariners, produce the double effect of improving the efficiency of American crews, and in the same ratio diminishing the efficiency of the British Merchant Service.

Legislative Enactments.

That it is therefore the opinion of this Committee that the earliest opportunity should be taken, in the next Session of Parliament, to call the attention of the Legislature to the present state of British ships and British seamen, with a view to introduction of such enactments as may be best calculated to elevate and improve the general chaacter of the British Mercantile Marine, and to place it in such a state of safety and efficiency, as to make its ships the most perfect structures that art and science can form, it endows the most distinguished for their competency and their skill, and its seamen as respectable in character, and as happy in the enjoyment of adequate remuneration for their toils, as their devotion to their country in war, and their services to commerce in peace, so justly entitle them to expect.

After which, His Majesty was pleased to make His Majesty’s a most gracious Speech from the Throne to both Houses of Parliament, as followeth:

My Lords and Gentlemen,

The state of the Public Business enables Me at length to relieve you from further attendance in Parliament; and in terminating your labours, I have again to acknowledge the zeal with which you have applied yourselves to the Public Business, and the attention which you have bestowed upon the important subjects which I brought under your consideration at the opening of the Session.

The assurances of friendly dispositions which I receive from all Foreign Powers enable Me to congratulate you upon the prospect that Peace will continue undisturbed.

I lament deeply that the internal state of Spain still renders that country the only exception to the general tranquillity of Europe; and I regret that the hopes which have been entertained of the termination of the Civil War have not hitherto been realized. In fulfilment of the engagements which I contracted by the Treaty of Quadruple Alliance, I have afforded to the Queen of Spain the co-operation of a part of My Naval Forces, and I continue to look with unabated solicitude to the restoration of that internal Peace in Spain which was one of the main objects of the Quadruple Treaty, and which is so essential to the interests of all Europe.

I am happy to be able to inform you, that My endeavours to remove the misunderstanding which had arisen between France and the United States have been crowned with complete success. The good offices which for that purpose I tendered to the two Governments, were accepted by both in the most frank and conciliatory spirit; and the relations of friendship have been re-established between them in a manner satisfactory and honourable to both parties. I trust that this circumstance will tend to draw still closer the ties which connect this Country with two great and friendly Nations.

I have regarded with interest your deliberations upon the Bills which have been presented to Parliament; and I have cheerfully given My assent to the measures which have been presented to Me for carrying into effect some of their most important recommendations.

It is with no ordinary satisfaction that I have learned that you have with great labour brought to maturity enactments upon the difficult subject of the Poor in England and Wales; which will, I trust, prove in their operation equitable to all the interests concerned, and generally beneficial in their results.

The passing of the Acts for Civil Registration and for Marriages in England and Wales; and the amendments of the laws relating to the Poor in England and Wales; have been to Me a source of the most lively gratification to observe the tranquillity which has prevailed, and the diminution of crimes which has lately taken place in Ireland. I trust that perseverance in a just and impartial system of Government...
The advanced period of the year, and the length of time during which you have been engaged in public affairs, must render you desirous of returning to your respective counties. You will there resume those duties which are in importance inferior only to your legislative functions; and your influence and example will greatly conduce to the maintenance of tranquillity, the encouragement of industry, and the confirmation of those moral and religious habits and principles which are essential to the well-being of every community.

Then the Lord Chancellor, by His Majesty's command, said,

My Lords and Gentlemen,

It is His Majesty's Royal will and pleasure, that this Parliament be prorogued to Thursday, the Twentieth day of October next, to be then here holden; and this Parliament is accordingly prorogued to Thursday, the Twentieth day of October next.

Jovis, 20° die Octobris ;
Anno 6°-7° Willielmi IVt Regis, 1836.

The Lords, authorized by virtue of His Majesty's Commission, desire the immediate attendance of this Honourable House in the House of Peers, to hear the Commission read.

Accordingly the House, with the Second Clerk Assistant, went up to the House of Peers; where the Commission was read, for the further proroguing of the Parliament until Thursday, the 8th day of December next; and the Parliament was accordingly prorogued until Thursday, the 8th day of December next.

Parliament proroged.

My dear Sir,
Clarges-street, 1st June 1835,

You having acceded to the terms proposed to you for the Election of the County of Carlow, viz. you are to pay before nomination £ 1,000, say One thousand pounds, and a like sum after being returned; the first to be paid absolutely and entirely, for being nominated; the second to be paid only in the event of your having been returned; I hereby undertake to guarantee and save you harmless from any and every other expense whatsoever, whether of agents, carriages, counsel, Petition against the Return, or of any other description; and I make this guarantee in the fullest sense of the honourable engagement that you should not possibly be required to pay one shilling more in any event, or upon any contingency whatsoever.

I am, my dear Sir,
Your very faithful
Alexander Raphael, Esquire,

Amendment proposed; Debate thereupon adjourned; 278. Debate resumed, 282. Question amended, and Resolution, That it appears to this House, that Mr. O'Connell addressed a Letter, bearing date the 1st of June 1835,

1835, to Mr. Raphael, in which an agreement for Mr. Raphael's Return for the County of Carlow for two thousand pounds was concluded:—Motion, That it appears that Nicholas Ayward Vigors, Esquire, was cognizant of, and consenting to the said agreement, and that, in pursuance thereof, the said Daniel O'Connell and the said Nicholas Ayward Vigors did endeavour to procure the return of the said Alexander Raphael as a Member to serve in Parliament for the said County of Carlow, and who was returned accordingly: Question amended, and Resolution, That the tone and tenor of this Letter appears to this House calculated to excite much suspicion and grave animadversion; but it appears, upon a careful investigation, that previous conferences and communications had taken place between Mr. Raphael and Mr. Vigors, and other persons connected with the County of Carlow, and that Mr. O'Connell was acting on this occasion at the express desire of Mr. Raphael, and was only the medium between Mr. Raphael and Mr. Vigors and the Political Club at Carlow:—Motion, That to enter into, or consent to, such an agreement, was a high breach of the privileges of this House: Question amended, and Resolution, That it appears to this House, that the money was paid to Mr. O'Connell's general account at his banker's in London; that it was, however, advanced to Mr. Vigors the moment it was called for; that, though some of it was paid in bills, the discount was allowed, and that the amount was therefore available whenever wanted:—That it is, therefore, the opinion of this House, no charge of a pecuniary character can be attached to Mr. O'Connell:—Motion, That such agreement as aforesaid is in violation of the Statute passed in the 49th year of King George the Third, for preventing the giving or receiving of money on any contract or agreement to procure, or endeavour to procure, the Return of any Person to serve in Parliament, 289. Question amended, and Resolution, That it appears to this House, that this money has been expended, under the immediate direction of Mr. Vigors, and others connected with the County of Carlow, on what may be called legal expenses, or so unavoidable that this House see no reason to question their legality; and that the balance was absorbed in defending the Return of Mr. Raphael and Mr. Vigors before the Committee appointed to investigate it, on the 28th July 1835:—Motion, That it appears that there was between the contracting parties a distinct understanding that if any surplus should remain after providing for the legal expenses of the Election of Mr. Raphael, that surplus should be applied in the first place towards defraying the expenses of a Petition upon a previous Election, and in the next to the fund of the Carlow Library; and that such understanding calls for the notice of this House, as liable to serious abuse, as of dangerous precedent, and as tending to subvert the freedom and purity of Election; Motion superseded by reading the other Orders of the day, 284.
